WASHINGTON,	NOVEMBER	7.	1888

MR. CLEVELAND may be defeated, and the power he has wielded may be transferred to other but not stronger hands. The masterful individuality of the man world. has made a powerful impress upon the political history of the country, and he will live when others whose popularity is far greater than his will be forgotten. Honest, fearless, patriotic, he has subserved party to country, and if defeat comes to him, he will accept it with the proud consciousness the politicians and not the people have laid it at his door. Mr. Cleveland has his faults; he has made mistakes, but he has always had the courage of his convictions, and no man can say he ever hesitated to take a step in advance when he believed that step was for the general good. Whatever else may be said of him, it may be truly said that he has set an example in many things his predecessors may follow with honor to themselves and with an eve single to the best interests of the country at large.

IT BREAKS THE Democratic heart to pay up arrearages on campaign assess ments now.

RING THE BELL softly, there's erape on the door-of the White House.

DEMOCRATIC LEADERS have one consolation in this sore hour of their bereavement. They have no rights under Harrison and get nothing; while under Cleveland they get nothing and have the right to everything. Actual loss is not so painful as constant tantalizing.

"THE COLORED troops fought nobly" for the Republicans.

WHY, ON THIS November day to be Republican is greater than a king.

NEW YORK CITY Democrats are not giving up $50,000,000 worth of city patronage for $4,000,000 worth of National patronage. Party pride is nothing unless the boodle goes with it.

"Yes, sire," murmured Daniel, with con vulsive sobs, and the two great men reposed on each other's bosoms, and an impenetrable gloom, damp with tears, fell upon them and shut them from the cruei gaze of an unfeeling

LOVE OF THE COUNTRY.

Miss Cleveland Tells How a Genuine En

thusiasm Is Created. The real way to become a true lover if it is in you is to get married. The real way to love nature is to well a bit of country, to take it for better or for of country, to take it for better or for worse for your very own, to settle down to it and live in it, until you know its every possible mood and influence in all winds and weathers; to invest your pride and reputation in it, to give your self up to it all summer, part of some winters, and begin to stop roaming. With nature there is no fear that familiarity will breed contempt. She is the only genuine here to her valet.

It matters less than one believes, at the start, where this particular spot of green earth is. Nature has always something fetching and fixing about here. One part of her can always boast some forms every Andrey.

One part of her can always boast some superiority over another part. One must do as a wise man does with his wife or his horse, brag of undeniable and apparent points; otherwise, silence. The possessive pronoun will do the rest. "Ill-favored, but mine own." The "mine own" is the magic which transforms every Andrey.

If you wish to possess the real article in place of bogus bucolies, cease to be a summer roamer. Cease eagerly to take, at bankrupting prices, board and lodging at some crowded "resort" or fashionable fad of a place which at your town home you would searcely offer to your servants. Cease to rent a house here, there, everywhere, if never twice in the same place. Nature will bear with you long, but in the end will despise you and punish you for your dis-with you long, but in the end will despise you and punish you for your distregard of her liberal offers of hospitality. Somewhere is the very best spot for Go anyhow, if you cannot buy, rent. If you cannot rent, board; but find a good If you cannot ret, board; but find a good place, and go there for, at least, a part of each year, until you have come to have a delicious sort of understanding with the goddess who haunts those hills and streams and groves. I will answer for the rest. The next thing will be a trysting place, and the next a marriage altar. You will gradually make a supprising discovery of how the sums paid to your hotel clerk or your landlady for a sent at table and a room to sleep in would pay rent and housekeeping in a cottage round the corner which is without a tenant; or, more astouding still, out a tenant: or, more astounding still, would pay the instalment due for the first year on the purchase-price of a house up the road which you know is for sale. This idea, once well lodged in your brain, will work wonders. You will walk for exercise round that corresponding all the same continually.

will walk for exercise round that corner contanually.

You will look long and fixedly at the cottage to let. There will be speculation always in your orbs. You will see how very little expenditure, under proper direction, would make a different place of it. This train of thought will go on until a sudden realization of how impossible would be these improvements unless one were owner and proprietor, builds a swift dam to your flood of alterations to the little cottage; in alarm you hasten to ascertain the cottage may be bought at a bargain. While still intoxicated with the dazzling possibilities looming up, a sober second thought suggests that you should look around a little and not be hasty. While thinking this matter over, you will abaround a little and not be hasty. While thinking this matter over, you will abstractedly walk up the road and soon find yourself contemplating the house which is for sale. As there is no harm in the world in merely looking at a thing, you will examine this new property with interest, and though the price asked is considerably above that fixed for the cottage, you will see, at a glance, that if one wanted to buy a nice country place, this would be a much cheaper property than the other by reason of its superiority in every respect.

property than the other by reason of its superiority in every respect.

With no sense of having at all committed yourself, you will extract from the proprietor of this place a promise of its refusal should another man call to see it before you return. You will now thoughtfully take your way back to the squalid apartments which you have presqualid apartments which you have pre-viously enjoyed. At meals, on the poor little tin comparison:) piazzas, on your pillow in your oppressive sleeping room, sleepless because of delighful imagina-tions, you will see about repairs and im-provements in the last-seen house, and an endless visits of impurious plans will set in for its transformation.

WASHINGTON CHIT CHAT. Wanted a Restaurant.

If some New Yorker would come to da town, says a correspondent of the New York Times, and open a restaurant where he would sell New York oysters erved in New York style, he would stand good elance of making a fortune within few years. It is something very surorising to the average New Yorker that prising to the average New Yorker that at none of the restaurants, with the possible exception of John Chamberlin's establishment, are oysters of a good flavor to be had. The cysters served at the majority of the restaurants and in the notels are as tough as leather, and of the size of the old-fashioned copper cents. In fact, they have a coppery flavor, and are very similar to those sold in the California markets. There is a famous restaurant in Pennsylvania avenue which depends almost entirely upon its sale of cysters.

proprietor has become very The proprietor has become ver-wealthy, and Washingtonians conside it quite a treat to be among his guests He serves systers in many ways, but the great demand is for those that are steamed. The average New Yorker soon discovers that the cooks of this establishment do not know how to serve systers in the simplest styles. The fried systers that are presented to the lovers of the bivalve would disgrace a Bowery restaurant of the lovers or the bivalve would disgrace a find the broiling of systers in cracker dust is restaurant of the lowest order, and the broiling of systers in cracier dust is something unbeard of except when a New Yorker orders them. When the alleged broiled systers are placed before him he generally arises, if he has any respect for himself, pays the check and, leaving the systers untouched, glides away never to return again. The systems old in the to return again. The systems sold in the markets and groceries to families are the most indigestible things to be obtained, yet they are disposed of in large quanti-ties, and are apparently highly relished.

The Coming Race. The main sporting event in prospect for the near future, says a Washington correspondent, is the big bont race which will be rowed between John Teemer and Wm. O'Connor on the 24th of the present The race will be for the championship of America and a stake of $2,000, or $1,000 a side. It will be rowed on the course laid out on the Potomac River at Washington, D. C. The two men are now in training for the event. Al Hamm is handling Teemer, Potomac River at Wushington, D. C. The two men are now in training for the event. Al Hamm is handling Teemer, who at present is training on the Monongahela near Pittsburg, but the poir will leave their quarters near that city on Monday and go directly to Washington, where the training will be finished in order that Teemer may be familiarized with the course ere the date of the event.

O'Connor is already on the ground, or on the water rather, at Washington, where he is being looked after by George Lee. In a letter received to-day by Mr. St. John, Hamm soys that he never saw Teemer in such splendid shape before, and has every confidence that he will undoubtedly beat his man on the 24th. He is rowing with all his old brilliant dash and speed and if O'Connor defeats him he will be compelled to go through the water at a dizzy gait. Bubear, on the other hand, writes Mr. St. John that O'Connor, in his judgment, is not at all up to Teemer's form and says that the victory should be his by no means. Mr. St. John, although he has half of Teemer's stake (the other half is furnished by the champion himself), does not regard the race over as yet. He says that O'Connor is a good man and that his long, steady pull is apt to deceive the best of the water critics. His stroke is very similar to the one with which Jake Gaudaur natonished the people in England. While not particularly bril-Jake Gaudaur estonished the people in England. Whatever may be result of the Teemer-O'Connor race, says another writer, I am inclined to think that both scullers will O'Connor race, says another writer, I am inclined to think that both scullers will go to Australia. They will both find plenty of work to do. The latest reports from Teemer's training quarters are to the effect that he is all right. He is rowing extremely well. At present I am inclined to think he will win. However, it would be foolish to ignore the fact that O'Connor is a good rower. He may be as much of a wonder as Beach, Scarle or Kemp. Few people thought that Beach would defeat lianlan, and a less number expected to see Hanlan beaten by Kemp. It was a general surptise when Scarle beat Kemp, and so it may be with O'Connor. To a great extent he is an unknown quantity. More than once I have been told that he can easily beat the best time ever made by Hanlan. He may be able to do this and still be beaten by Teemer. O'Connor may be a wonder, but the probabilities are that he will not. He must be one to beat Teemer.

Abraham Lincoln's Head.

Portland Oregonium.

In the arched entrance of the court house is a keystone with the lical of Abraham Lincoln carved on it. In these times of peace very few of the thousands who annually climb the stony steps and pass into the great building ever look up at the stony face of the martyr President above them, and not one in a hundred of those who do have the least idea that there is a scrap of local history connected with it. When the building was built, nearly a quarter of a century ago, and when it was announced that Lincoin's head would adorn the keystone, quite a number of Democratic lawyers and others, who were in sympathy with the secssion movement, openly declared that they would never pass into the court house under the stony giare of the face of the ilberator of the negro slaves, and it is said some, true to the negro slaves, and it is said some, true to their word, used the Fifth avenue entrance for provements in the last-seen house, and an endless visits of rapturous plans will set in for its transformation into your country place.

A SPANISH MAID'S DOWRY.

How the Custom of Wearing Orang Blossoms at a Wedding Originated.

The custom of wearing orang-blossoms at weddings is of comparatively recent date with us.

It came to us, like most other fashions in female dress, from the French, who in their turn had derived it from Spain, says Chember's Journal. In the latter country it had long obtained, and is said to have been originally of Moorish origin.

There is, however, an old Spanish legend which gives a different account of its hitroduction. He walked into the Tuxedo Club, according to the ver-sion of the affair that is now accepted, called a servant to him in a loud tone, and, handlur him a letter addressed to a young lady, told him to take it to her, and he sure and deliver it to her per-sonally and without the knowledge of arvone who might be stratifus to. anyone who might be standing by. Hence the potition to the board of governors, which resulted in the letter to Mr. Potter requesting him not to repeat the offence of introducing Mr. Bellew into the Tuxeda Club.
